LEARNING OBJECTIVES

The primary learning objectives for this class are for the students to analyze the importance of historical context, for the students to demonstrate the ability to analyze works by historians, and for students to conduct historical research in a well organized written paper that is mechanically correct and supported by relevant documentation.

In this course, the student will study the conquest of Mexico and the subsequent emergence of a new people, the Mexican race, with a new culture formed by the fusion of Spanish and Indian customs.

The student will also concentrate on the activities of the initial Spanish-speaking newcomers, both explorers and colonizers, in the area that will later be known as the American Southwest.

The student will also focus on the wars of independence in Mexico and their immense impact on that country.

The student will also consider the European events that exerted considerable influence on the development of the Mexican people, such as the War of the Spanish Succession, the French Revolution, and Napoleonic Wars.

The student will also spend more than half of the course examining the repercussions of the arrival of Anglo-Americans to Mexico's northern frontier.

The student, as far as contact between Anglo-Americans and Mexican-Americans, will start by focusing on the relations between the two groups during the nineteenth century.

The student will also examine the process by which Mexican-Americans commenced to integrate to the mainstream of American society.

To accomplish these learning objectives, the student will be expected to read their main textbook and to attend lectures where these topics will be presented and discussed by both students and professor.

TEXTBOOKS AND EXAMS:

The textbook needed for this course is North to Aztlán: A History of Mexican-Americans in the United States (isbn 0-88295-243-9) by Richard Griswold del Castillo and Arnolde de León.

Material from this book, as well as items discussed in the lectures, will appear in examinations.

The students will demonstrate their mastery of the material learned in the textbook and discussed in class by taking fifteen weekly quizzes during the semester. The quizzes will consist of fifteen multiple choice questions and each of them will be worth thirty points. Make-up exams will not be given. Final exam will not be comprehensive.

CLASSROOM REGULATIONS:

Some classroom regulations will be followed during the semester. To avoid class disruptions, students must refrain from arriving late to class, leaving the classroom prior to the end of class, and talking to their classmates during lectures. If a student misses anything during the lecture, the professor urges students to ask questions that might help clarify the topic under discussion. Students with medical conditions that require brief departures from the classroom must notify the professor before the start of lecture. Students must also turn off their cell-phones while in class. Tape recorders will not be allowed in the classroom.

ATTENDANCE:

Because regular attendance leads to a successful completion of the course and high grades, the professor expects students to attend all classes. All students who miss four regular classes, two days during the summer or nights, or more will need to speak with the professor and might be dropped from the course or lose a letter grade at the end of the semester.
